Simple html template for personal website

When each page of your site follows the same design theme, it's easy to create a template for the site using HTML and PHP. Specific pages of the site contain only their content, not their design. This makes it easier to change the design because changes occur on all pages of the website at the same time, and there is no need to individually update certain pages when design changes. The first thing you need to do is create a file called .php. This file contains all the page design elements that come before the content. Here's an example: My site My site Title of My Website Menu goes here..... . Pick 1 Choice 2 Choice 3 Next, make a file called footer.php. This file contains all the information about the design of the site, which goes under the content. Here's an example: Copyright 2008 My site Finally created content pages for your site. In this file you: Call the title file (headline.php)Put in the page of a specific contentCall file footer (footer.php) Here's an example of how to do it: The sub-page title here is the specific content of this page Don't forget to save all the files with .php extensions. You can have more than a headline and a footer. If necessary, create other files to include them in the middle and call them in the same way. Tie the templates with a style sheet to change the style in the exclusive content of the page. With the likes of Shadow and Edge, along with the acquisitions of PhoneGap and Typekit, it's clear Adobe is in the spotlight more and more on web standards. The company has also developed cutting-edge CSS, such as CSS Regions, for magazine-style layouts, and CSS shaders, for cinematic effects for the Internet. The new website, Adobe and HTML, aims to be the central repository of information surrounding Adobe's web standards, along with events the company is working on. Cyber Monday Deals: See all the best deals right now! Deepa Subramaniam, Adobe Web Platform Group Product Manager, outlined three main sections of the site in a blog post. Web standards focus on projects to promote standards and implement functions directly into WebKit, such as CSS Regions or CSS Shaders, and include custom builds and samples. Open source details of open projects Adobe is heading and contributing, such as j-Kvery Mobile. And Tools and Services explores Adobe's various manufacturing tools for designers and developers.
